Retro Summer Reading

Here's an idea -This summer, skip the new books, and read good books from the past.

The summer reading lists are on the way. Every newspaper, magazine and celebrity blogger will make their recommendations for the latest in formulaic, forgettable fluff. Predictable, dull and safe.

This year skip Nora Roberts, John Grisham, Stephanie Meyer and all the cookie cutter blockbusters. Instead, dust off your Wayback Machine to visit some excellent books that have been left behind, from names like Toni Morrison,

John D. MacDonald, Ayn Rand and more. Whether we've been meaning to read them, meaning to re-read them or had forgotten them altogether, these are books we're proud to pull out of the beach bag.

The Coffee Tree Books & Brew time machine is working great. Come in and pick out some great old books to take you on a great summer vacation!

Panama Boquette – Eduardo Taylor Estate

Taylor Estate is situated in Panama between the Caldera River, which lies to the east, and Baru Volcano to its west. What does this mean for your cup of coffee?

Volcanic lava that emits from the center of the earth has not ever been exposed to sun or air meaning it has retained its nutrients for centuries. Our trees were planted, cultivated and nourished with all the rich nutrients found in the volcanic soil giving each bean increased acidic levels, therefore improving the flavor. The high altitude of Taylor Estate offers increased precipitation and protection of the plant by late afternoon cloud coverage. Because the nights are cooler at this altitude, our trees develop more slowly which gives a fuller flavor to the beans.

The Baru Volcano has been called one of the most bio-diverse places in the world. Great coffees are produced under the shade of old growth trees. This shading prevents over exposure from the sun allowing the coffee cherries to develop slowly increasing flavor and complexity in the cup. Shade trees also provide an ideal habitat for songbirds which are very important in controlling harmful insects. These micro-ecosystems produce great coffees and provide habitat for diverse flora and fauna.

Supply of this coffee is very limited as it is only available once a year. Treat yourself now to this intense brew where its amazing taste originated from... the center of the earth.
